

[...]first hearing was not very different from English. It was only when I had tangled myself up in a hopeless maze of small wooden houses, dust, street refuse, and children who played with empty kerosene tins, that I discovered the difference of speech. You want to go to the Palace Hotel? said an affable youth on a dray. What in hell are you doing here, then? This is about the lowest ward in the city. Go six blocks north to corner of Geary and Markey, then walk around till you strike corner of Gutter and Sixteenth, and that brings you there. I do not vouch for the literal accuracy of these directions, quoting but from a disordered memory. Amen, I said. But who am I that I should strike the corners of such as you name? Peradventure they be gentlemen of repute, and might hit back. Bring it down to dots, my son. I thought he would have smitten me, but he didnt. He explained that no one ever used the word street, and that every one was supposed to know how the streets ran, for sometimes the names were upon the lamps and sometimes they werent. Fortified with these directions, I proceeded till I found a mighty street, full of sumptuous buildings four and five stories high, but paved with rude[...].
