

Marcella Hollister's first love, Sky, has been missing for eighteen years. When he sends her a box with precious essential oils, a memory stick loaded with medical and scientific data, and a velvet bag of emeralds, she's bowled over. What does it mean? After all these years, is Sky still alive? Her husband Quinn—a beautiful Native American man who adores her and hates the idea of Sky coming back into her life—is wary about the whole thing. But there's no time to waste, because drug company goons break into their home to demand the memory stick. Links to a newly discovered essential oil with a promising leukemia cure are revealed, and if there's a cure, the greedy company can't sell their lucrative cancer meds. Their goal: to silence everyone involved, including every doctor and patient who took part in the studies. Chased by ruthless thugs through the woods and lakes of the six million acre Adirondack wilderness, Marcella and Quinn must summon courage they never knew they had to fight to save the proof that could change the world.
