

Come with me. You will be safe now. Still suffering from a brutal attack several years ago, Lisa dreads going to sleep and the nightmares that she lives through every night. Haunted by dark figures and intimidating shadows, she despairs about ever overcoming the bone-numbing terror that follows her. But this time, as she slips into another restless night, she finds an unexpected balm in the form of a dark, handsome man wandering her dreams. Crying out for help, she's surprised to find him turn to her, igniting passions she had thought lost forever and soothing her pain with a dark seduction she's helpless to resist. But who is this man? Is he purely something her subconscious dreamed up to save her...and if so, why do his own eyes seem so haunted? Excerpt Please—this can't happen—don't let this happen to me! The thought was barely acknowledged, just a mass of desperation and emotion flung into the ether as I felt myself at the limit of my endurance, knew I would soon be stumbling to the floor and panic overtook me. The trees were still doing battle with me, each branch clawing at me and making me pay for every step I took into their territory, and as I shrugged past yet another nameless obstacle, I could almost see something through the trees. I blinked, squinted, and then cursed myself for wishful imaginings, shaking my head to clear it of desperation-borne visions. Turning back to the path I was blazing ahead, the same feeling held me again and wisps of something appeared in the corner of my eye, only to be gone again when I looked. I'm going mad! But the forest to my left did look slightly lighter, more inviting, I was sure of it. Angling in that direction, the shouts behind of men catching up sent fear down my spine. I was flagging, I could feel it, even adrenaline no longer able to sustain my weak body. I sobbed as I slowed, looking desperately around for any relief - and then I saw it, through the trees in front of me, a glimpse of movement! Oh, please... Hope giving me a last burst of speed, I dashed forward, breaking through the trees to see a man more clearly, walking casually through these misbegotten woods as if terror wasn't stalking nearby. Help! Oh gods, please help me! He turned towards me, and I barely thought twice before running up and straight into him, almost knocking him over with my desperation for safety. They're coming! They're right behind me, please help, don't let them take me... I could barely form the breath to speak and my words were weak and incoherent as I clung to this man's arms. The strength revealed from the muscles there reassured me, made me feel perhaps I had a chance. He had to help me! He reached up and put his hands on my shoulders, steadying me, as he looked behind me at the woods. Then he looked back at me and I saw what a mess I was in his eyes - wind-swept and battered by the dark forest. His hand reached to wipe both hair and tears from my face, running his finger down my cheek, then nodded, his face a welcome blend of tenderness and something else I couldn't place, something intent. Come with me. You will be safe now.
