

Published together with the Australian Film, Television and Radio School, this is a manual of radio production methods and practices for the Australian reader. Written in straightforward language and illustrated with clear diagrams, it provides a broad introduction to radio for students and practitioners of commercial, national and public broadcasting. The book opens with a general introduction to the radio industry, then discusses the essential techniques and issues in radio. It includes writing for the ear, and the specific requirements of radio drama, news, advertisements, promotions and public service announcements. It provides step-by-step editing instructions, details of sound experimentation and mixing, and a guide to programming.
