This is exactly how the institutions, i.e. banks, brokerage houses, and mutual funds manage their investments. I term this style of investing, "Institutional style" of managing money, because it is what they do. Here is another excerpt from page 25: A quick word of warning here; many times I would speak with a person who thought they were well diversified because they owned several different mutual funds. The problem that would often present itself was they would own the same type of funds over and over again. So they may have just owned large cap funds for example, and in reality they were just doubling, or tripling or even more what they already owned. That is not diversified. Yet another excerpt from page 34: Now you know what you are going to do if the market goes up, down or sideways. You have a system, a plan. Almost exactly like the system which big banks, funds and investment companies use themselves. They don't want you to know this because they like charging you big fees and commissions for their so-called expert advice. Invest in your future and get this book now!
