

Royal Highness prefixed to it, as the greatest reward his literary labours could attain ;and participating in these sentiments, I feel equally flattered by so distinguished a privilege. Warmly attached to the kingly power from principle, and convinced by the experience of history, how much a constitutional monarch may perform for the interests of humanity, the object of this Dedication is that of soliciting the attention of your Royal Highness to a subject, in which the energies of a free people may be most usefully exerted in favour of the whole universe. While some princes have laboured to acquire the terrific immortality of an Alexander, a Caesar, and a Ghengis Khan ;others, animated by a more legitimate love of fame, derive their glory from imitating the virtues of an Aristides, a Trajan, and an Alfred. It is amidst the names of the latter, I am desirous of seeing that of a British sovereign inscribed ;and should the authors proposition to colonize Northern Africa, be fortunately honoured with the support of your Royal Highness, none but those who are determined to oppose the progress of knowledge and civilization, can deny it this elevated distinction. Grateful for the condescension I experience in being permitted to lay this work before your Royal Highness, I have the honour to be, with sentiments of profound respect, and unfeigned loyalty. Sir, Your Royal Highnesss most humble. And most devoted Servant, EDWARD BLAQUIERE. London, April 10th, (Typographical errors above are due to OCR software and dont occur in the book.)
