

A spys cover is blown and she is fired from her agency. To survive, she must fight for her life against terrorists and work to uncover a mole... When Cassandra Sashakovich, a bright but arrogant economist and consultant, is in Riyadh completing a financial forecasting assignment, her cover is blown by a mole from her intelligence agency. A covert agent whose call sign is Swiftshadow, she barely survives an encounter with a hit man and escapes to Washington, where she is fired by her agency for becoming a liability. On her own and with her cover blown, Cassie finds herself in the crosshairs of terrorists, who fear she may have hacked the details of their pending operation. To survive and recover her life, Cassie must identify the mole in her agency and neutralize the terrorists. To do this, Cassie finds help from two unlikely sources, a rogue agent, Lee Ainsley, and a homeless teen named Ann Silbee. Cassie desperately races against the clock to expose plots by both her own government and the terrorists, so that she can recapture her life and save her country. Can Cassie find a way to survive and avoid being a naive tool of her country again or will death find not only Cassie, but millions of Americans?
