

A lice. A re you never coming? It was dear Papa s voice reverberating up from the regions below; and I, a timid debutante, on the eve of my first ball, surrounded by Mamma, two of my aunts, and three female attendants, was standing before my mirror, giving the finishing touches to a toilette, the duration of which had severely taxed my patience. My hand, trembling with excitement, gave one final pat to the delicate curve of water-waves that fringed my brow, classic, I believe; at least, I have been told so, and my maid approached to lay over my bare arms and shoulders the conventional fleecy cloak. My dress was from Paris, a simple white tulle, the overskirt trimmed with artificial flowers. A single red rose in my dark brown hair; that was all.
