

Since man first inhabited the United Kingdom, he has fished for food. The rich waters of Cornwall, where the English Channel, Irish Sea and Atlantic Oceans meet have always proved to have a bountiful harvest for the fisherman, with all types of fish from pilchards to herring and langoustine to crab and everything in between being caught in Cornish waters. The variety of fish and crustaceans created unique fishing craft with many being built locally. John McWilliams takes us through both the types of fish, the techniques and the vessels used to catch them and gives us an informative and readable history of the Cornish Fishing Industry.
