

Deborah, under suspicion, returns alone to the scene where a gaudy diva was murderedâ€”to the house on the rooftop of a Chicago apartment building. â€œShe reached the roof and emerged at the opening of the parapet wall. Flat, black, and dirty. Chimneys, incinerators, ventilators. The house itself, dark and dingy and passive. Nothing moved... . No sound except, away below, the murmur of a passing automobile... . Quite suddenly she realized that if she had removed the threat of the police she had also removed their protection.â€• In a few moments she will face sheer dizzying horror.
