

Summary: In Bath, a young painter is hired to paint the portrait of the wife of Mr Elliott. Mrs Joan Elliot, a petit and beautiful woman from France, is shy and correct and, despite the fact that she is almost twice his age, Basil becomes infatuated with her. Then suddenly, during one of the painting session, a small accident occurs which will have unforeseen and erotic consequences. Keywords: Infatuation, craving, oil painting, tea, adultery. An extract from the story: She did a small vexing sound, and struggled against me for a second, but with a small whimper she yielded and let me kiss her. Her attempt to struggle aroused me further and my feelings must have transferred from me to her, because shortly she kissed me back quite ardently, and when I started to let my hands explore her small breast through her cape, she let her hands slid in under my shirt. After a while, she boldly started to explore my bottom, and without second thoughts, I ripped off her cape, her shirt and pulled down her petticoats to reach and kiss her small breasts.
