

The following Discourse was delivered by David Brooks, A. M., in Derby, Ct., in 1774, at the request of his kinsman. Gen. David Wooster, to whose memory a monument is now erecting at Danbury, Conn., by the joint efforts and contributions of the State of Connecticut, the Masonic Fraternity, and the citizens of Danbury. To mark the period of this early demonstration from the Pulpit of New England, it may be observed, that it was shortly after the publication of the Boston Port Bill, and the assembling of the General Congress at Philadelphia; and preceded the first levies of troops from Connecticut, the Battle of Lexington, and the stirring events that followed. It was when the necessity of the Revolution had been clearly indicated by repeated acts of tyranny and oppression on the part of the British Parliament; when its spirit was rapidly spreading throughout the Colonies, and pervading all ranks and conditions in life; in a fearful exigency, in which was involved the Liberty and Happiness of the oppressed Colonies; and in which the Ministers of Religion rightly judging that religious and political freedom were intimately blended, and equally concerned in the great contest that was pending deemed it no perversion of their sacred office to espouse the cause of Freedom and the Rights of Man. I have entitled the Discourse, The Religion of the Revolution, a title which will be regarded as well chosen, by those who appreciate its able vindication of the righteous cause it espoused; the deep, earnest and conscientious solicitude of its author to justify the oppressed against the oppressor, by the teachings of the Bible. The author of this Discourse was born at Cheshire, Conn., in June, 1744; graduated at Yale College, in 1765; became a preacher of the Gospel, and an advocate of the principles of the Revolution. He belonged to the first quota of men furnished by the (Typographical errors above are due to OCR software and do not occur in the book.)
